Author's Preface

The paranormal has always fascinated me on some level. Whether it be aliens, people moving things with their minds or the Loch Ness monster, the idea that there was something out there happening, that we had no explanation for, was incredibly interesting to me. The more I learned of the paranormal the more my interest grew.

I think we would all like to know what is really going on. As I ventured from subject to subject on the paranormal I saw individual studies and scientists looking to crack the matter wide open. Whenever we were able to answer a question countless more always came up. At some point I noticed that, while the studies and experiments were deep and detailed, they only seemed to focus on one area. It also seemed science kept falling behind on all the paranormal things reported as well. For everything they could find an explanation for, there were at least twice as many things they couldn't explain.

At some point I read a report of a scientist working with molecules that discovered they all seemed to be connected. He could not prove exactly how, but the distance between them did not seem to matter and that they seemed to be able to communicate to each other. Turns out that followed a lot of the spiritual beliefs in the East with yin/yang, the Buddhists, and some others. I really began to think then about how everything may be connected.

Perhaps all the paranormal things couldn't be proved scientifically, at least not yet. They needed a push from the paranormal side to make some unexplainable things make sense. So I started reading and researching looking for connections. I thought maybe some aspects of the paranormal can only be proven by the paranormal. If everything is connected then science would find its own way and connect the dots to things the paranormal already had lines laid out for.

All of this requires one to really take a step outside of their comfort zone and really believe some areas are real and possible. I think all stories came from somewhere. Legends and folklore seem to really stretch beliefs, especially since the majority of them seem to have a lesson as their focus and not set-up as reporting a real event, however fantastic. Extravagant stories really have to start somewhere and by someone and don't just spring out of thin air, so looking at those I had to be able to figure out which were the lesson stories and which may have been rooted in real events. In countries and cultures without a written language being able to determine which is which goes a long way in finding another dot to connect or if it's just a made-up tale and a wild goose chase that will lead nowhere.

I hope this book makes others look for connections in the paranormal world, hopefully filling in gaps and making new connections to things I did not see or left out. This is really the work of many who have conducted and studied in specialized areas of the paranormal so the connections I think I have here can even be made. Everyday something strange or weird is reported that may not be looked into, or even investigated enough to connect it with something else. My goal here is to try and see the big picture, of our world as a whole, by connecting the paranormal enough to see how it interacts with our normal. This is my attempt to take a step back and see it all at once to make sense of the unexplained.

Some of the books and resources I used are detailed in the "Suggested Reading" section at the end of this ebook. Where possible a direct link is made to the book for easy reference. I encourage everyone to question and investigate any claim made, including in this, my own work, to try and find the truth behind it all and iron out any errors. I think together, with enough people trying to find all the connections possible, we can see the paranormal for what it is and understand it. So, I hope you enjoy this ebook. It has taken a lot of time and effort to write and I hope it will raise questions and bring people to action in this area of our world to collectively make sense of the unexplained.

Introduction

"When convention and science offer us no answers, might we not finally turn to the fantastic as a plausibility?" - David Duchovny as Fox Mulder (The X-Files, "Pilot")

I think one of the most misunderstood things about the paranormal is that it may be normal. Things we don't understand and perhaps simply don't possess the technology yet to be able to fully understand the phenomena out there. If we did, wouldn't those paranormal investigators be out of a job? Their area of study would just be "normal investigation", nothing "para" about it. Nevertheless, their work must be done, as the modern and mainstream accepted sciences want no part of it for the time being. Whatever is happening across the world, regarding all types of paranormal events and phenomena, it's pretty clear something is going on. Unless the entire planet is in varying states of hallucination and hysteria, and let's hope we find out if that's true if it's indeed happening...

I present another look at the strange happenings in our world. Perhaps, only the fantastic can be proven by the fantastic. Our world's ecosystems are interconnected through the efforts of plants, animals, and the world around them to keep the circle of life moving. The paranormal maybe connected in the same way. Connected, both in it's own separate existence from us, and with us moving in concert with our known ecosystems and life cycles. So, in my approach to this large area of the paranormal, I try to think of ways to connect the dots of the paranormal in such a way that they don't contradict something else already existing, either in the world as we know it or maybe something that exists to us only in folklore.

To knock a few off the top the existence of UFOs does not contradict whether the Loch Ness Monster exists or not. Both could co-exist at the same time. Likewise prophets and their prophecies don't contradict the existence of ghosts. The cryptozoology field itself has a natural basis for everything in it to be true, just undiscovered. In another direction the idea of enhanced consciousness and levels of spirituality naturally contradict nothing in the psychical world. Science is moving in leaps and bounds in certain aspects of this area and it may one day be proven, but for now, telekenesis, telepathy and other mind powers remain in the paranormal category. No "mind power" contradicts any of the above either; it too can exist at the same time. To change directions again, Scottish legends of Little People could fall in a number of categories. It could simply be cryptozoology being a race of pygmies in different areas of the Earth.

It all must be approached with a healthy bit of skepticism of course. There are hoaxed tales and hoaxed evidence to all of the above subjects I listed. The thing to remember is that we've got tens of thousands of years of folklore, stories, legends and our modern sights to draw on for information. I believe all the pieces are there to solve some of the puzzle. We just don't know what the big picture is supposed to look like. The vast majority of this field makes the average person take a leap of faith too far for them most of the time, but if enough people don't do it, how are we ever to going to the bottom of our planet's mysteries?

Little People And Fairies

Whatever our current, modern thought on Little People and fairies, the fact legends and stories exist of them in cultures around the world is hard to dispute. No other area is as attached to these creatures as England, Ireland, and Scotland possessing some amazing stories of these beings. Sightings of Little People and fairies continue to this day, and perhaps even some of our modern sightings of things we don't understand could be this phenomena as well. Here an example of a recent sighting from the book Fairies: Real Encounters With Little People by Janet Bord:

"Quite recently, probably in the early 1990s, fifteen-year-old Brian Collins was on holiday in the Aran Islands off west Donegal. While out walking early one morning he saw two little men fishing from a bank overlooking the sea. They were about 3 and a half feet tall, dressed in green with brown boots. One had a grey beard and a flat hat. They were laughing and talking in Irish, and suddenly they jumped over the bank. When Brian went to look for them, they had gone, but they had left a pipe behind. He took it back to the house where he was staying, but while there disappeared from a locked drawer. When Brian saw the little men again, he tried to photograph them and tape-record their conversation, but nothing came out."

The point of the modern day sighting is to really show these events still happen. Fairies vary in size, shape and appearance, but when seen the person involved in the sighting is aware of what they're looking at. As the above sighting shows our movie and storybooks depicting these beings as small, sometimes bearded, and commonly dressed in green or brown may be based on sightings and reports of them. The classic book The Secret Commonwealth of Elves, Fauns, and Fairies by Reverend Robert Kirk details the life and culture of these beings. It was believed he got his information from local folklore and tales where he grew up in Aberfoyle, Scotland. A diary of his has since been found directly regarding this subject matter called The Secret Life of Elves and Fairies; From The Private Journal of The Reverend Robert Kirk where, if you can believe it, he says he conversed and visited these beings where they dwell in the Fairy Realm.

Kirk is not the only person who has claimed to have gone where these beings live. He called it "The Lands Beneath" and said the fairies lived inside the Earth. In the sightings and stories I've read through there seems to be at least a few where people report two different things, or call them different things, but may be the same phenomena. A common one over time is the nature spirit. In the eyes of the witnesses the beings share a lot of similarities. But can we trust our eyes with this area of the paranormal?

Both of the above books suggest that fairies, or some races of them, can shapeshift. They sometimes use what's called "glamour" to change their appearance, perhaps letting us see what we think we should be seeing. This is also a common believe in fairy lore and seems to be lending itself to modern studies and researchers trying their best to define something that may not be definable and simply look how our mind tells us it should look. Over the centuries many common threads can be found with these beings, glamour and shapeshifting are among them. People seeing them disappear into thin air is also concurrent with lots of sightings.

The very nature of these beings makes proving their existence next to impossible. Do we really have to prove if they exist or not to get the bottom of other things though? We already have mountains of information on them going back the last few hundred years. It may be time to use the fantastic to help provide clues and missing pieces to other areas of the fantastic. Other cultures besides the Scottish and Irish thought them to be fact, such as the Cherokee Indians designating a name for them. Perhaps Little People and fairies should be filed under Cryptozoology to make things a little simpler. A couple fairy beliefs and abilities seen and reported by these creatures overlap with other areas of the paranormal.

Little Green Men and Little People

This will probably seem like a shot in the dark at first, but there are actually many similarities between the two. If the passage of time is any indication of proof or lack thereof, the descriptions of such beings, either the Little People or the modern UFO alien name of "little green men", then both seem to be well lined up for further investigation on historical stories handed down and reported alone. With time our names and terminology change. We describe things as they would make sense to others around us to understand us. In this same regard, perhaps, at least a few of these instances are the same thing.

I proposed that the common described way of dress of the Little People was as our own fairy tales describe. Bearded, dressed in brown or green clothing, short in height, and even pointed hats. That's an example of one sighting of a fairy, where many more describe them either in green dress, or some having a greenish tint to their skin color. Green is a common color among the look and dress of those that have fairy sightings. Often it is either their skin or clothing that is green, rarely both. To an extent, much of a fairies appearance to us may be from their "glamour". This means, that the being that we see may be something we can recognize and understand, even if it's a little odder than our accepted norm.

But what of the flying objects? If Little People live under the earth, a place they call "The Lands Beneath", then what of the sightings of flying vehicles or UFOs?

In August of 1956 in Badajoz, Spain a UFO was sighted flying just 10 feet above the ground and 150 feet away from a group of ten adults and twenty children, who ran towards the craft gesturing at two entities they could see inside. The occupants, of whom they were only able to see the head and shoulders before the craft flew away, appeared to them to have greenish skin.

Numerous sightings like the one above exist to show an overlapping description between a UFO entity and the tales of Little People, where nature spirits or other fairy sighting show the beings to have similar skin tones or dress. While the phrase "little green men" is more out of our lexicon than "alien" with some research the reports and sightings can be found that show both Little People and Little Green Men share more physical characteristics than they do not.

It was once suggested that aliens had bases beneath the Earth that they used to launch and land their vehicles. These beings could be one and the same and appear to us as we think they should appear. The subject of a world under the Earth is a complicated subject and one I hope to look into later. With reports of alien beings who look greenish and Little People who often do, any number of things are possible here. They could be different races communicating or the same race doing business in sight of us we could not imagine. The theory of a Hollow Earth is on the far fringes of any reputable science so a race and world underneath ours is not something they'll look into as the sightings and stories, as mentioned above, are just as fantastic.

Hollow Earth Theory and The Lands Beneath

I know I've dwelled on fairies for quite a while, but this mostly due to their constant reappearance, in some form or another, as times go by despite how much our world changes and becomes more modern. This last aspect of their existence, called "The Lands Beneath" by the Reverend Robert Kirk in his book, ties in very well with other legends that our Earth may be hollow.

Hollow Earth Theory, if you are one hearing this term for the first time, is the concept, thought, or belief that the Earth is hollow. Normally it is believed holes exist at the poles of the Earth that can lead one inside. While no modern account really exists of anyone actually entering the Earth and returning to tell the story, it is had long belief across the globe in various forms as the times changed.

"The Lands Beneath" is what the beings Robert Kirk encountered in Aberfoyle, Scotland, called where they live. A place under the Earth. His books are really worth checking out, a lot of his writing lives on today as the basis for what we typically widely regarded as fairy life and culture. The place, described by Kirk, is said to be as real as it is to you reading this now, filled with forests, mountains, and countryside much like our fairytale vision of that today. He would have no feeling of traveling far if he did with his companion, and believed the world around him was thought into existence. Even the things he saw he was unsure were really there later, figuring that's how he thought it should look. It was a dreamlike world, seemingly controlled by thought.

Before getting into other areas here, a basic difference should be noted. The fairies of Kirk's writings went back to The Lands Beneath through passages of their own design in the hills and landforms where Kirk lived. The Hollow Earth Theory almost exclusively cites the poles at entrance points. This is a small, but I think important, detail.

The Greek's belief in Hades, Christianity's Hell, and the Egyptian's Underworld are great examples of how beliefs and thought of a place beneath us has changed over thousands of years. Another theory has been proposed that our Earth exists in layers. Us on the surface, caves and tunnels with their own culture and cities in the next layer, and finally the existence of a world like ours in the center. The idea of a dimly lit sun suspended in the center of the Earth seems to reappear in what seem to be unrelated stories and accounts of strange happenings to people, though few exist today. There is the idea that aliens are landing their spacecraft under the Earth as well, taking off and landing at their own leisure.

Without actually going inside can we find out how true any of our current theories or past beliefs are. Like many paranormal things a hollow Earth has many avenues of tradition, legends, and stories, even if they don't directly say so. By looking between the lines we are bound to find bits of truth, maybe enough to discover if a place under us really exists.

The Moon Landing and JFK

I'm going to change gears for a moment here to touch on some American History. In the 1960s, President John F. Kennedy gave his speech to land a man on the moon before the end of the century. It started the space race between the US and Russia.

This is an often joked about theory that seems to steadily be getting more stock as truth rather than fiction over the years. I, of course, am talking about the footage we see of Neil Armstrong on the moon is faked. In more than one place now you can read about scientists saying that if the moon was really as it was described and believed then our video footage is wrong.

The dust on the moon doesn't get blown around when their ship lands for example. Running the tape in double speed will reveal the astronauts hopping around in very real time. So the moon landing tape could simply have been set to play at half speed to give the illusion of lower gravity. Almost 50 years later, a little research will produce lots of books and reports of people trying to debunk the moon landing as real. There is more on the tape and publicly released at the time that more supports the fake landing theory than the real event taking place in my opinion.

"If you can't do it, fake it." –Richard Nixon

As the story goes, for the conspiracy theorists, JFK was told shortly before his historical moon landing speech, that we already had bases on the moon. Finding out about this Kennedy wanted to blow the whistle on them. It is not so hard to believe we may already have had bases on the moon IF something like the Roswell incident is to be believed. Backwards engineering is common enough, and if they had a downed spacecraft, they had about 20 years to figure out how it works and test it for space travel.

It's been suggested that because JFK was going to expose the people working in his administration who kept it from him, and obviously, from us they assassinated him. It really is a question no one seems to be asking. WHY was Kennedy assassinated? It seems the circumstances of his death have outweighed the reason why he was killed in the first place. This may have been by design, complete with setting up a patsy (Lee Harvey Oswald) to take the fall and put attention away from someone or entity within the government.

Roswell and The Shadow Government

So, in 1947 a UFO spacecraft crashed in Roswell, New Mexico, was spotted by a local resident and reported to newspapers the following day. After that, the "downed weather balloon" story came out denying anything that was reported the day before. I think it's fair to say we've all heard or read many different sides, versions, and stories of the Roswell incident.

I think it was the most noteworthy, and definitely most famous, of UFO mythology in the United States. It raised the public consciousness to more than aliens being in the realm of science fiction. In fact, Roswell has more chance of being a true incident than not, because through our millennia of civilization, you can be pretty sure one or two ET spacecraft may crash at some point. Roswell just happened in our time.

The Shadow Government is what's believed to run behind the scenes. Their interest is in making a one world government to cover-ups, study, and investigation of the extra terrestrial presence on Earth, of which many prominent people are said to be in, or recruited from secret societies. Some agencies involved are believed to do unconstitutional things "in the National interest" for political manipulation even against the Congressional rules that brought them into being.

The Shadow Government is a very well organized machine working in the dark using fronts and covert operations to pay for and develop weapons based on backward engineered extra terrestrial technology, manipulate the political system for it's own interests, and seeks to work in parallel with the government as we know it to continue it's black operations without being seen by the regular person.

A short list of some agencies involved, in some way or another, are the National Security Agency (NSA), The National Security Council (NSC), Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), and the Department of Energy (DOE). This is a well researched area that will make wondering how deep the rabbit hole really goes. It's highly possible Roswell was not the first time the darker side of some of these agencies used their intricate network to misinform the public of the real nature of what is going on.

Information is passed through on a "need to know" basis, which would help to explain JFK being out of the loop and wanting to blow the whistle on their operation. Past and future presidents have been in the know of things like this in the past, like George Bush Sr., former director of the CIA. President Kennedy seemed to not be as fortunate, and not wanting to keep the news to himself, was probably assassinated to keep the Shadow Government going on in secret, form being known, and likely explored in depth by the public.

It would seem that, behind the scenes, the government not only believes in UFOs and aliens, but are backwards engineering their technology, using that technology to create weapons that would exist to us only science fiction now, possibly communicating with certain races, and using their own testing of terrestrial craft as a means to mislead the public to what they really see as a real sighting of a UFO, while "officially" they deny the existence of UFOs altogether.

It works well in their favor as a current UFO believer is seen as a “crackpot” or loon and the sighting is discarded and not investigated. Any investigation, however compelling the evidence for a UFO or mistaken craft that looks like one, is briefly considered, then people move on with their lives. It a way of hiding in plain sight using some truth to blur the lines to discount UFOs and their evidence or presence on Earth.

Secret Societies and MJ-12

Majority 12 (MJ-12) was created by former President Truman on September 24, 1947. In later years President Eisenhower set it up as a committee inside the National Security Council (NSC) in 1954 by a secret executive order with the President having final approval on all “Black” or covert projects. It was “Order Number 15-42” and been one of the terms used to name the group throughout the years. It’s name has changed often through uses of different people referring to it, but the group itself has not changed. Eisenhower also commissioned the creation of a group called The Jason Society of which contained 32 of the most prominent men in the USA. Inside the Jason Society its top 12 members were to be in Majority 12 (MJ-12). A secret place for meetings was constructed in Maryland call “The Country Club” that is accessible only by air. The group itself was organized by General George C. Marshall to study the Roswell-Magdalena debris and recovery.

MJ-12 recruited most of its members from the “Skull and Bones” and “Scroll and Key” secret societies of Harvard and Yale, bringing them into the Jason Society. The first 6 members of the group came from Government positions. Their main purpose was to oversee and be responsible for all activities regarding the alien question. It’s members included then Director of the FBI, J. Edgar Hoover, Allen Dulles, the Director of Central Intelligence, Nelson Rockefeller, as well as the Secretary of Defense and Secretary of State. It was a very powerful group believed to still exist today.

Some of the most famous de-classified UFO projects known today started with them, such as Project Blue Book and Project Sign, which were part of a bigger project called "MAJIC". MAJIC is responsible for anything and everything Alien related. Information, disinformation, as well as all Alien projects land under it, and it has its roots in MJ-12. Some other MAJIC projects were Project Sigma, which was set up to establish communications with Aliens, Project Pounce, created to recover crashed Alien craft as well as provide cover stories on their retrieval, and Project Redlight, which was created to test fly alien craft. Project Redlight takes place at Area 51 as well as a base south of it call S-4.

Old and powerful societies like the Freemasons also run things regarding the alien question more internationally. The Freemasons have roots going hundreds of year into the past and many of their members work behind the scenes in a one-world government sort of way. Some of its most powerful members are in great control of the world's wealth and setting the monetary standard. They have families such as the Merovingians and the Rothschilds. It is probably not a stretch to say these groups and societies have overlapping members and communication.

Time Travel and the Government

If you search online today for the name "John Titor" you'll find some message boards, stories, and websites devoted to him. He claims to be from the year 2036 and came back to the year 2000. He has said, in his worldline, the US was in a civil war in 2011 and that the government knows about time travel. Titor has said the worldline he is from differs from ours by about 2%, and in his worldline actually experienced the Y2K bug that didn't affect us. The Y2K bug is one of the things he has said he came back to our time to fix. Below is a picture of his time machine:

If Titor is to be believed we're in for a rocky future in the coming years. He is not the only tale of time travel though. There is the legendary Philadelphia Experiment. Which in 1943, in a government project to try to make something invisible, sent the USS Eldridge through time. Two brothers who claim to have been part of the experiment have given their account of the events in a piece called "Al Bielak's Lecture" that happened in December 1990 in Las Vegas and was recorded by Joshua Shapiro. Some interesting excerpts from that lecture are as follows:

He claims that the movie, " The Philadelphia Experiment" is essentially correct except when he and his brother jumped over the ship, when it was in hyperspace, they did not land in the future in the desert of Nevada, but at the secret base in Montauk, NY in 1984. For you see, he claims, the Government tried the same experiment 41 years later, on the same date and time, and opened up a hole in time between the two eras.

This is an interesting part because it would mean our timelines can be connected, though an unstable connection, that would allow someone to go back and forth between two points in time where a time travel was tried and experimented with again. It also would assume that you cannot go back further in the time than when the time machine was made. So you could only back in time so far as the machine was first created, but no further back. Bielak said his brother stayed in the future while he went back to destroy some equipment on the Eldridge, the reasoning being they had created a hole in time that kept opening, and if not stopped would destroy our world.

The last piece of information I found quite fascinating in Mr. Bielak's talk was a discussion about time travel and parallel universes. He stated that using the equipment they had developed, they were able to identify at least four other parallel earths (similar to the TV program on Fox called "Sliders") and in one of these parallel earths, Germany won World War II.

This information is fascinating by itself. I find it pairs nicely with the Akashic Records and our ability to create reality through thought. It would suggest all worlds we know, are connected in some way, if just on the thought level, and perhaps by believing these places exist have thought them into reality. Another issue regarding our near future came up as well:

Next he talked about what has happened when the time tunnel was used at Montauk to go into the future. He stated that for some reason, they could never penetrate the years 2011-2013. He also stated that the technology is so good, they could pull you out, ship you to another time period and bring you back so fast, that it would appear as no time had passed yet you could have aged several months or years because of the time you spent in the other time. He claimed that this happened to him on a number of occasions. Lastly, he shared that when they were able to see the future, past 2013, it appeared as if there was no life living on the earth.

The Mayan calendar ends, as many know, in the year 2012. According to Titor, the world did not end at 2012 in his wordline, but some major changes happened. In Bielak's experience they were simply unable to go there. A block or barrier was keeping them from accessing those years. The Aztec also have prophecies relating to these coming years. The best explanation, I've personally heard, is that a vibrational change in the Earth will occur in 2012.

Many books and sources will tell you the government already has time travel fully and operational. While these two are not the only accounts of such things happening as far back as the 1940s and earlier, there seems to be common ground between them all that it is at least being tested and experimented. Some suggest their time travel experiment were helped with direction by gray aliens (The Grays we've heard of) and their individual experiments into this area. The Montauk Project and the Phoenix Projects 1-3 being other government operations into time travel.

The Subconscious, The Spirit, and the Metaphysical

In regards to the nonphysical and/or mental aspects of the paranormal getting and understood separation of different words and terms is helpful. At some spots you may be looking at the same thing, but it's so close to another part of the mind or being, it's hard to know where to draw a line—if there is one.

The Subconscious is the part of our mind we have main access to while we sleep. It's the part of us that seems to see clearest in the quiet, during meditation, or, as mentioned before, during sleep. Typically, this is because there are no, or very few, outside things to interrupt us from tapping into our subconscious.

Sometimes it's called "the voice inside you" or maybe something like "the voice in your head" that makes you do good or bad things. In the waking world, the subconscious is not understood, nor do we know much about it.

The spirit is a pretty simple differentiation from the subconscious. If our physical body were a glove, it would be the hand inside that makes it all move and work. It's the nonphysical being of ourselves that I believe we all know is there, even if our ability to tap into that part of ourselves is limited. Perhaps the main place to draw the line between the two would be that the subconscious would be part of the spirit. The person or being behind the body is the same, just a formless part of them that lives on after one passes.

These start the metaphysical areas of the paranormal where science, as is, can neither prove or disprove their existence. From dream interpretation to Astral projection to channeling, due to the nature of the mind, and the impossibility of science now to prove the existence of the spirit, this area is perhaps, a bigger leap of faith to take in and believe more than any other area. Most people seem to know, if only in the back of their minds, there's truth to some of this somewhere, but putting their finger on it is difficult. In such a misunderstood area, though part of ancient cultures thousands of years ago, our understanding of the mental and spiritual realms, techniques, and practices are very small and limited.

Spiritual Evolution

For our mental arts, the driving goal seems to be the same for each one. Enlightenment, to live a better life, to be at peace, generally they all point in the same direction. To touch on previous topics, it was reported that a humanoid alien landed and offered our government(s) a chance to get their knowledge and help us evolve spiritually on the condition we disarm all our nuclear weapons. The government refused to do so, instead deciding to trade technology with an alien race in exchange for the occasional abduction, and only if they got a list of all abductees. The humanoid race did not believe we were spiritually evolved enough to handle our weapons of mass destruction.

They're probably right, but the purpose of this section is to better explain why spiritual evolution is talked about at all. There exists many "dimensions" of reality. This is probably not news to you, but for the spiritual evolution it's a given that they are there. We live in a 3rd dimensional reality, as I'm sure you can tell from looking around you, but our life and experiences are, for the most part, limited to just the physical world around us.

At higher levels of spiritual development we will need our physical body less and can use our spirit form, or even subconscious mind, to travel and go other places and learn other things. The power to do this is within every person. When you are in touch with your spiritual self and have practiced things like meditation and other mental arts, you can perhaps break free, willingly, from the physical body and explore the invisible worlds around us.

We've got lots of terms for many different areas and techniques that branch from spiritual development, even if all we know of now is an elementary level of the spirit. Remote viewing, astral travel, the channeling of another consciousness through our body, are related to the practitioner learning how to control their mind and spirit to perform those tasks.

In order to progress as spiritual beings we need to develop past where we are now by feeding our mind the knowledge and things it needs to know to allow us to live on the next dimension of existence. Highly evolved spiritual beings would be able to do things and perform things that would seem to us to be magic, but at their stage of spiritual evolution may be commonplace. Telepathy, telekinesis, and ESP, I'm convinced, fall into this category of something learned by the more spiritually developed entities. A great deal of ancient writings by some of the ancient world's most brilliant minds hint at this kind of development. They seemed to believe that if we wanted to develop as a race, and a people, we needed to seek enlightenment through improving ourselves spiritually.

The Akashic Records and Clairvoyance

The Akashic Records have been called "The Earth's Memory", and "The Book of Life". It records everything. Every thought, every event, and beat of a bird's wing, to every breath you take. It's The Earth's filing system, so to speak, of any and every event that has happened, or ever will happen. It is an interactive library one can access and check to see events, feelings, and thoughts of different people all throughout time. The sleeping prophet, Edgar Cayce, said during his readings he accessed the Akashic.

It is believed one can access the Akashic in different states of consciousness so is not only limited to mystics or other practitioners of the mental arts, but regular people can do it as well. It is mentioned by, and as far back, as the Phoenicians, the Babylonians, the Arabs, and the Hebrews. It is a spiritual place, one that Cayce seemed to be able to reach while in his trance state doing readings.

The Akashic not only record what has happened, but the possibility of any event of happening. Starting with the base of thought, before anything becomes real, any possible future, with more thought of it happening than another, has the better chance of manifesting. This is because all things are thought first, then people act on those thoughts to create reality around them. The Akashic, recording everyone's thoughts and feelings, has the ability to foretell certain outcomes and events to any who can access it. It is like a brain with electrical activity in masses in certain parts, but not in others. Where the electrical activity is highest that is the most probable line of events to happen. This is the result of a collective unconsciousness of us, who are recorded by the Akashic, to bring things into being by our thoughts alone.

Cayce's report of accessing the Akashic is this, from one of his readings:

I see myself as a tiny dot out of my physical body, which lies inert before me. I find myself oppressed by darkness and there is a feeling of terrific loneliness. Suddenly, I am conscious of a white beam of light. As this tiny dot, I move upward following the light, knowing that I must follow it or be lost.

As I move along this path of light I gradually become conscious of various levels upon which there is movement. Upon the first levels there are vague, horrible shapes, grotesque forms such as one sees in nightmares. Passing on, there begin to appear on either side misshapen forms of human beings with some part of the body magnified. Again there is change and I become conscious of gray-hooded forms moving downward. Gradually, these become lighter in color. Then the direction changes and these forms move upward and the color of the robes grows rapidly lighter. Next, there begin to appear on either side vague outlines of houses, walls, trees, etc., but everything is motionless. As I pass on, there is more light and movement in what appear to be normal cities and towns. With the growth of movement I become conscious of sounds, at first indistinct rumblings, then music, laughter, and singing of birds. There is more and more light, the colors become very beautiful, and there is the sound of wonderful music. The houses are left behind, ahead there is only a blending of sound and color. Quite suddenly I come upon a hall of records. It is a hall without walls, without ceiling, but I am conscious of seeing an old man who hands me a large book, a record of the individual for whom I seek information.

Reading 294-19 Report File

Edgar Cayce spoke most about this Akashic in modern times. He has several books of his readings and subjects he talked about. To anyone who can read the Akashic Records there is probably nothing mystical or paranormal about it. It's the universe's computer database that records everything in all of our lives and individuals, so the fortune telling aspect will be easy to make sense out of when looking at a certain individual.

Cayce made particularly mention to "Entities now known as" in his readings suggesting a spiritual life after death and reincarnation. He gave some past life readings to people using the Akashic. In our drive for spiritual development it may take more than one life to become evolved, so Cayce's access was able to help individuals on their way. Edgar Cayce is a fascinating person in this area of prophecy and metaphysical worlds. His books and work cover volumes in themselves. As one of our best modern may Akashic readers, learning about his craft and how he learned to perfect it, will provide more insight into this area than I am able. Just on his readings alone, he's connected more dots for me than anyone else I've researched.

Cryptozoology

Cryptozoology is the study of unknown, and unproven, animals and other wildlife biology. In my opinion, a number of things could land in this area. Bigfoot, el chupacabra, the Loch Ness Monster and other fantastic creatures of legend today and in the past seem to fall in this area.

Bigfoot and the chupacabra have a habit of being seen in the same areas where UFOs are sighted, more often than they are not. While the chupacabra seems to be limited to the Mexico area, Bigfoot seems to be seen in more areas around the world. If you read the descriptions of some of the more recent fantastic creature sightings, it would seem the chupacabra is slowly making it's way out of Mexico and to other nearby countries and areas.

Bigfoot seems to have many names depending on the culture and place the creature has been spotted. Some examples are the Abominable Snowman, Yeti, and Sasquatch. Lots of races or animals have eluded us until we were able to prove their existence or capture one of them. I think Bigfoot will eventually fall into this category.

In this realm I think fairies land too. They may well have their own realm of living separate but parallel to ours, but they are still another unproven race or animal with just as many years of sightings and stories. There is more interaction between them and people than with the wild creatures like the Jersey Devil and Mothman. Where their belief is held strongest, in Ireland and Scotland, it has really only been until recently where it has been questioned as just being folklore. To the inhabitants of those countries, fairies were a part of life and their interaction was an everyday occurrence.

Scientists are studying and looking for proof of these creatures everyday. Lots of these creatures land on the fringes of accepted modern science as well, so it's likely some of the top authorities in the field won't touch these creatures until the fringe scientists are able to bring forth more proof or raise enough word or alarm to get an understanding of them to the public. It is these fringe scientists that are on the frontlines of making the paranormal, normal, so that we can all understand and put these mysterious creatures, and their biology, to rest.

Atlantis and Ancient Technology

The ancients, probably, do not get enough credit for the technology they possessed. Our current surviving ruins of their buildings and layouts for cities still exist to show us a hint of what they could do, but we probably have not scratched the surface of what they actually had.

The Nazca lines, which are pictures made on the ground that are only visible for what they really are from the air is just one piece to the puzzle. The stones of Stone Henge and how they were moved is another. We really have no real idea what the site was designed to be for. The Pyramids, which also involved the moving of more heavy stones and much higher up also baffles scientists today to how it was built. The monoliths on Easter Island present the same problem for those wondering how each one was constructed and moved. The Maya and the Inca have the calendars that also baffle scientists today for their accuracy. The Maya did not use the number zero either, making their astronomically aligned cities even more puzzling. So how did they do it? The explanations, and stories about them, seem almost as unbelievable as the real things before us today.

I believe it was said to Napoleon, when he was invading Egypt, that the pyramids were made by having the heavy blocks levitated into place. Levitation is not an unusual phenomena in the world of the paranormal, but what is different is that typically the person demonstrating it is levitated or some small object, not near the size and weight of the heavy stones the pyramids have. Thousands of years ago Egypt may not have been a desert, but a vast forest region, so it has been suggested that used large logs to roll the stones, thus decreasing their overall weight across a wider area, and move them.

The Nazca lines themselves suggest the ancients had flight long before the Wright Brothers made their first plane. The Japanese have ancient stories of spectacular battles taking place in the air, and perhaps, even in space. Since we cannot easily or specifically determine how long ago these cultures and things were created, it would be hard to tell what kind of technology they actually had even with a good fossil record. Some of the technology we have today I'm sure would decay completely or simply be unrecognizable to a future culture if dug up in the distant future.

In just a few hundred years of modern history we've created many machines and luxuries that didn't exist a short time before. Television, air travel, cars, radio and the ability to harness electricity are just a few of the things that have come into the light in the last 200 years or so. It's not too hard to suggest, that the ancients, in their millennia before us, could have done something similar if not a lot more. Ancient space travel isn't too far out of the question either when considered against how long it took us in modern times to get to the moon and send satellites to other planets.

The ancient technology really comes to light, and legends seem fantastic enough to be completely made-up, when Atlantis is brought into the picture. The Atlanteans were supposed to be so advanced that they were delving into genetic engineering and the use of lasers. According to Edgar Cayce they may have genetically engineered dinosaurs, though on accident. Plato and Cayce have fascinating information about these people that seem to have existed long before our oldest civilizations.

Their culture seems to predate the Sumerians and Lemurians whose cultures possibly sprung from former inhabitants of Atlantis settling elsewhere after the city sunk to the bottom of the sea. They brought their knowledge and technology with them as they migrated to sites around the globe slowly through time. Plato reports that Atlantis was destroyed by an earthquake that sent the city into the sea, but this could also have been the result of an unforeseen side effect of the Atlantean scientists experimenting with lasers or other technology unknown to us today. So while the earthquake probably did occur there is the possibility it was not a naturally occurring event but the end result of an experiment gone wrong. Cayce makes note that dinosaurs, though not directly called by that name, was the result of genetic experiments. They tried to correct their mistake by attempting to destroy the super lizard type animals they had created with varying success.

The Atlanteans seem to be the oldest civilization we know of that has gone through our Earth's cycles. It would seem apparent they knew this as well, particularly with cultures far younger than them that know of these same cycles, particularly the Mayans. It's theorized that one of these Earth cycles caused Atlantis to sink beneath the sea. The Earth goes through a renewal type cycle every 25,000 years. It is this particular cycle, the planet cleansing type, that may be the cause for the earthquake that sent Atlantis under as well.

The last time a similar cycle has happened seems to be the Flood in the Bible, with another seeming to come in the year 2012. The Mayan long count calendar supports this as many researchers have deciphered exactly how they recorded their history as well as global events. So if the Atlanteans did possess technology greater than our own today it would seem the Earth cycles themselves may be the primary cause for sending us back to the stone ages each time.

Final Thoughts

This book is a constant work-in-progress, or at least it will continue to be until either I, or others who are looking to connect the dots, discover the big picture. I think some of the lines are straight forward; Little People to Aliens, Roswell to the Shadow Government, Prophecy and the Akashic Records. Others took some thinking to see the line, like the change in vibration in the Earth in 2012 and spiritual evolution or how the Akashic may be why time travel is possible.

I realize there are things I didn't touch on, like ghosts and psychics, but the line they share with other paranormal phenomena is not clear to me at this time. I don't think there is any question they are out there and stuff happens everyday regarding them, but for the moment, they don't seem to fit anything I've been able to connect. Hopefully, I'll be able to figure that out soon and further complete the big picture—maybe in another book. I did learn something in the creation of this ebook though, the subjects jump, twist and turn when least expected to where the research goes next. One day I may need to read Plato's account of Atlantis and the next be following it into a time travel direction.

The work load is large, and can be overwhelming, which is why I tried to find one connection at a time and see where it led me. I hope future investigators in this all-encompassing paranormal area are able to find more than I have and keep this going. This book was fun for me to write as I have a genuine interest in the paranormal, and I hope to do another one soon. Thanks for reading.
